Volume XIV  Issue VII

October 29, 2021

I see wood, ladders, drills, squares of wood, and people working. I heard a lot of noise coming from the construction.

We are building a new classroom, a new meeting room that will include a kitchen, dining room, and a fireplace with a bake oven. I want the addition so the school can be bigger and we can have more room. We could have more kids, too.

During this week in math we have been working on binomials and parabolas. We solved the binomial problems and took the equation that remained and imputed it into a graphing application called Desmos. We received a parabola. Then we made an equation that would explain how parabolas turn out when graphed.

The Faces of Mandala

On page 2 you will see all of our students' self portraits created in art class. Different age groups were using various techniques to create their work.

In Spanish class we are reviewing numbers 1-30 and some objects in the classroom. We reviewed what a noun is and mainly focused on the idea part of a noun. Most of us didn't know what defined an idea so we did work on that and at the end of class we were able to make a list of ideas. Reviewing this will help us when we learn nouns in Spanish.

Student of the week: Ama!

Ama is a bright, bubbly 7-year-old girl. This is her third year at Mandala. She lives with her mom, dad, and brother, Inti. They have a dog, Sugar Maple, and a cat, Magia. She lives in West Falls. The coolest place she's ever been is Argentina. She likes art. Ama is kind, smart, colorful, and a nice friend. Ama likes to play in her dollhouse and with dolls. She likes bears. When she grows up Ama wants to be a teacher and a mom.

Hunters Creek Park

On Thursday we went to Hunters Creek. It was really fun to see all the little creeks, and then at the end see the really big one. A lot of the students tried walking across to get to the other side of the creek. On some parts we couldn't do that because the current was too harsh. It was very pretty all the views of the the trees changing color and the leaves falling. By Kate
